1. True or False

Kubler-Ross did not intend for her stage model of grief to be used to predict or prescribe how a person 'should' be grieving correctly.

2. A central element of the 'Dual Process Model' of grief (proposed by Stroebe and Schut) is that:

- a. Grief is a multi-layered experience with multiple processes occurring during bereavement
- b. The bereaved often experience a going back and forth between feeling the loss experience and distracting themselves from the loss during their bereavement
- c. One must be able to experience conflicting feelings during their grief in order to heal from it
- d. Grief can be seen as a two-stage process including both disorganization and reorganization

3. Worden's Tasks of Mourning include all of the following EXCEPT:

- a. To Accept the Reality of Loss
- b. To Accept One's Feelings about the Loss
- c. To Process the Pain of Grief
- d. To Adjust to a World Without the Deceased
